ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

On behalf of the Corcoran Gallery of Art I wish to express gratitude to the following lenders: Mr. and Mrs. W. Edward Booker, Knoxville; Dr. and Mrs. Hugh Rose, San Francisco; Jo Hanson Schlesinger, San Francisco; The Dulin Gallery of Art, Knoxville; The William Sawyer Gallery, San Francisco.

My sincerest thanks go also to Contemporary Films/McGraw Hill for its generous loan of the prize-winning film Holy Ghost People. Filmed in 1966-67 by Peter Adair, the film documents a typical service of a Pentecostal Church in West Virginia where handling venomous snakes and drinking strychnine are part of the normal ritual.

For her introduction to this catalogue thanks to Elizabeth Coffelt, a freelance writer from San Francisco who has long been familiar with the artist's work.

Of the Gallery staff I wish to thank Associate Director Hal Glicksman for his assistance in the installation of the exhibition, and Director Walter Hopps for his overall guidance. Thanks also to Joe Stewart who worked with staff members on various aspects of the exhibition.

My special thanks to the artist, Eleanor Creekmore Dickinson, for her invaluable collaboration and assistance in every phase of the exhibition from inception to installation.

ARTIST'S NOTE

For the past three summers I have been drawing, tape recording, and assembling the media for Revival!, an exhibition set in the ambience of a tent revival meeting in the Great Smoky Mountains of Tennessee.

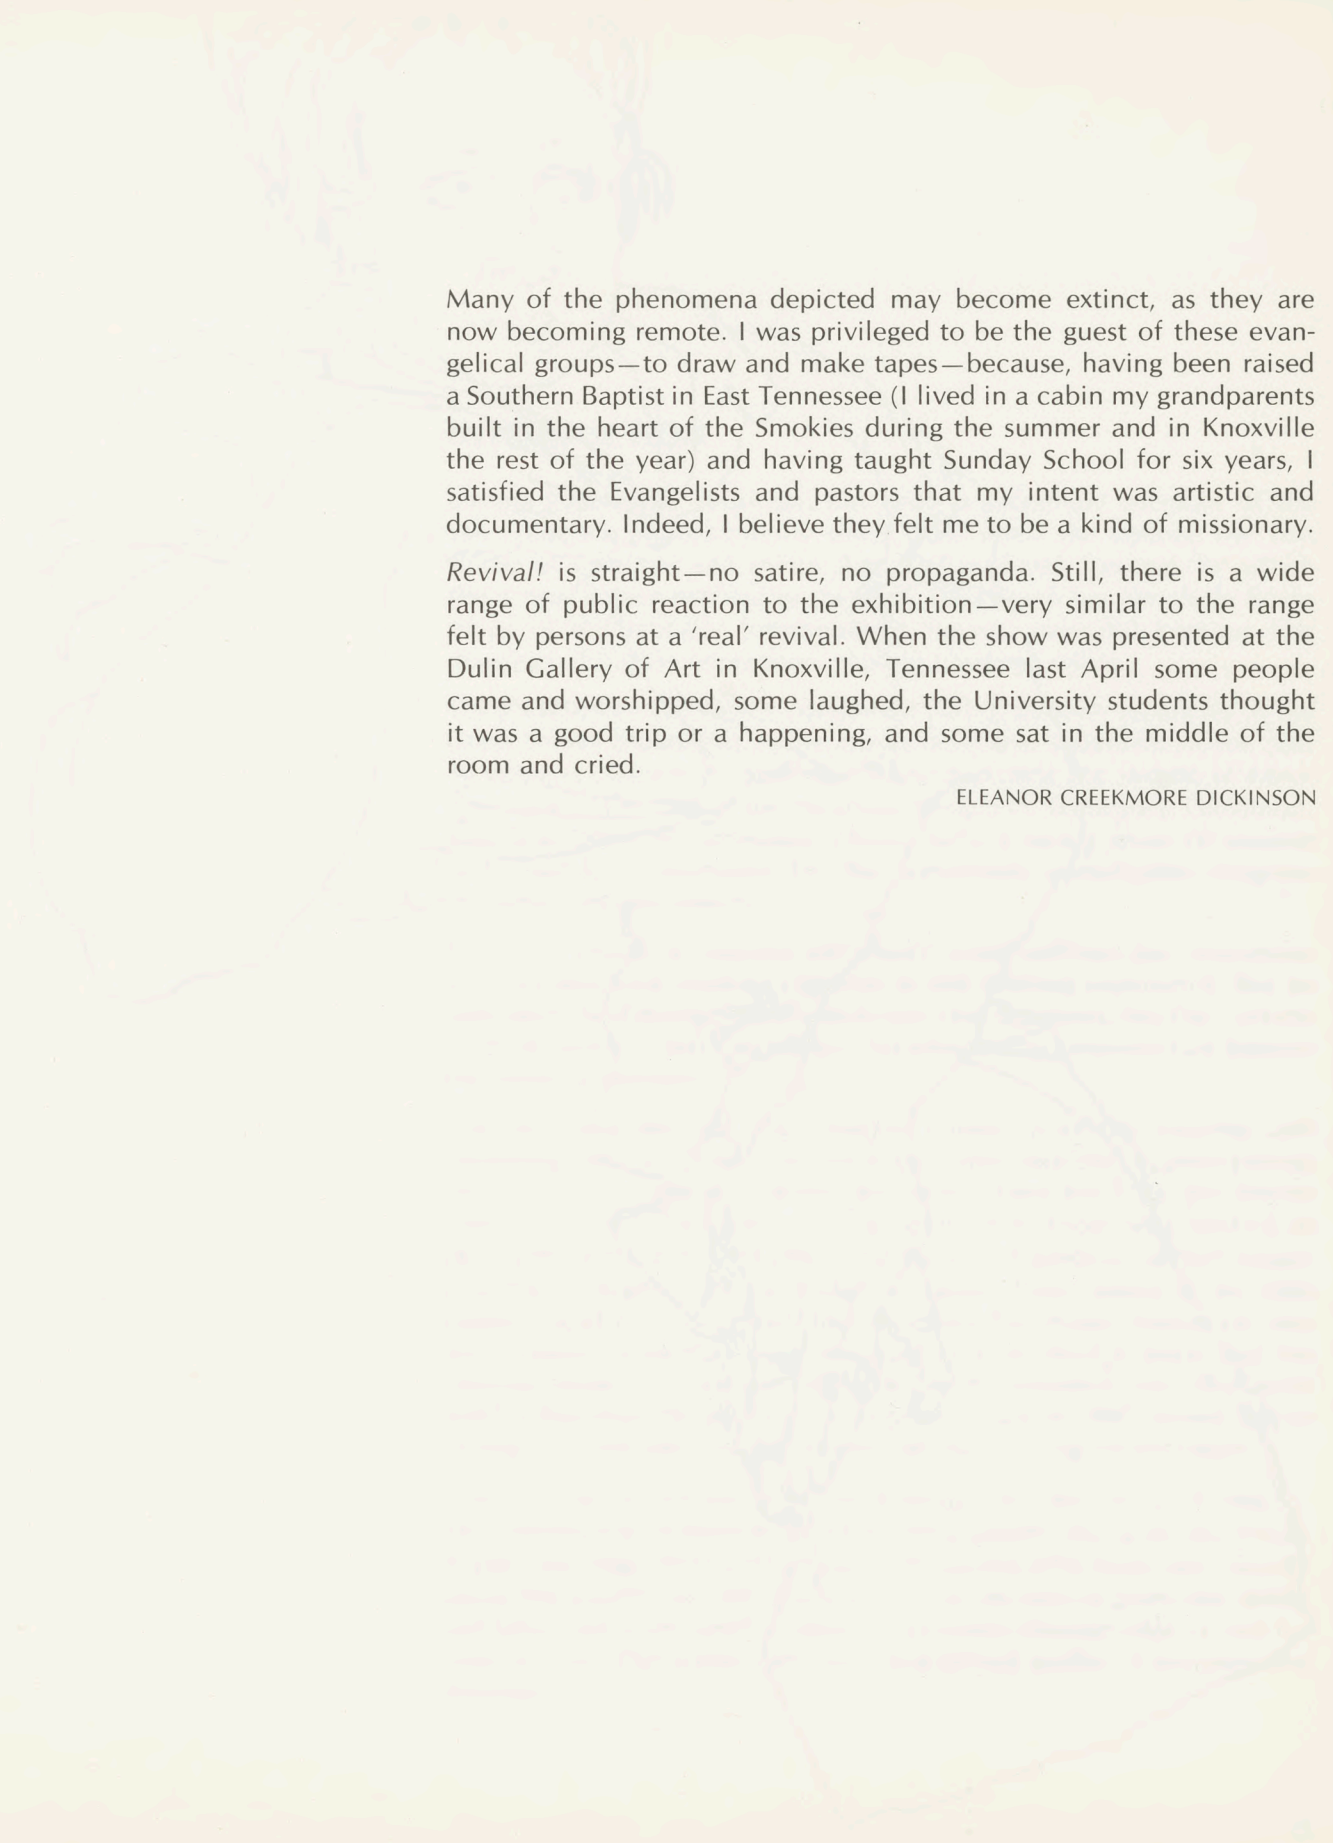

A revival is an evangelistic service or series of services—usually 10 days in the summer—for the purpose of effecting a religious awakening. Traditionally, revivals have been held in open tents, but urbanization and the availability of air-conditioned public facilities and churches have resulted in a sharply decreasing number of tents.

For the people of East Tennessee revivals are a big emotional outlet. There isn't much else emotional in their lives. They are quiet, they work hard, they are strongly loyal to their families and to each other. Their hands and bodies are bent from working, their faces kind and during these revivals exalted. It's very, very important to them. When they get up to speak they may cry. They believe speech is closely tied to the ability to think, to the act of faith. They believe that God is using their bodies to act out some purpose—that God is speaking when they are, speaking-in-tongues. When one of them has a revelation he is, at that moment, holy—God is speaking through him. The rest are very hushed and reverent and may sing, "Come by here, my Lord, come by here."

The drawings and tapes were done in or near Pigeon Forge, Goose Gap, Happy Hollow, Sevierville, Maryville, Valley Grove, Elkmont, Knoxville, Wear Valley, Mucktown, Lebanon, Sunset Gap, and Clinton during the past three summers. Some of the services were individual missions, some were sponsored by churches. The latter include Baptist, Church of God, Assembly of God, Missionary Baptist, Primitive Baptist, and Pentecostal; their religious customs differ—sometimes greatly. The congregations were white, black, and black and white.

Many of the phenomena depicted may become extinct, as they are now becoming remote. I was privileged to be the guest of these evangelical groups—to draw and make tapes—because, having been raised a Southern Baptist in East Tennessee (I lived in a cabin my grandparents built in the heart of the Smokies during the summer and in Knoxville the rest of the year) and having taught Sunday School for six years, I satisfied the Evangelists and pastors that my intent was artistic and documentary. Indeed, I believe they felt me to be a kind of missionary.

Revival! is straight—no satire, no propaganda. Still, there is a wide range of public reaction to the exhibition—very similar to the range felt by persons at a ‘real’ revival. When the show was presented at the Dulin Gallery of Art in Knoxville, Tennessee last April some people came and worshipped, some laughed, the University students thought it was a good trip or a happening, and some sat in the middle of the room and cried.

ELEANOR CREEKMORE DICKINSON

INTRODUCTION

Eleanor Creekmore Dickinson has been a prominent member of the San Francisco art community since 1954, when she opened her first studio as a painter and printmaker. The outsized drawings for which she is now known evolved in the early 1960's with her People in Boxes series of dramatically foreshortened figures, powerful contour line drawings of human expression, sharply black on white.

The present Revival! series, completed during summer tenancies in the Great Smoky Mountains, is the artist's definitive statement of the past 10 years. It contains 84 drawings, many depicting the instant of transfiguration in the lives of the mountain people of Tennessee. Dickinson, herself a native of Tennessee, clearly feels a strong sense of passion and reality as evidenced by the sometimes apocalyptic religious moments she documents.

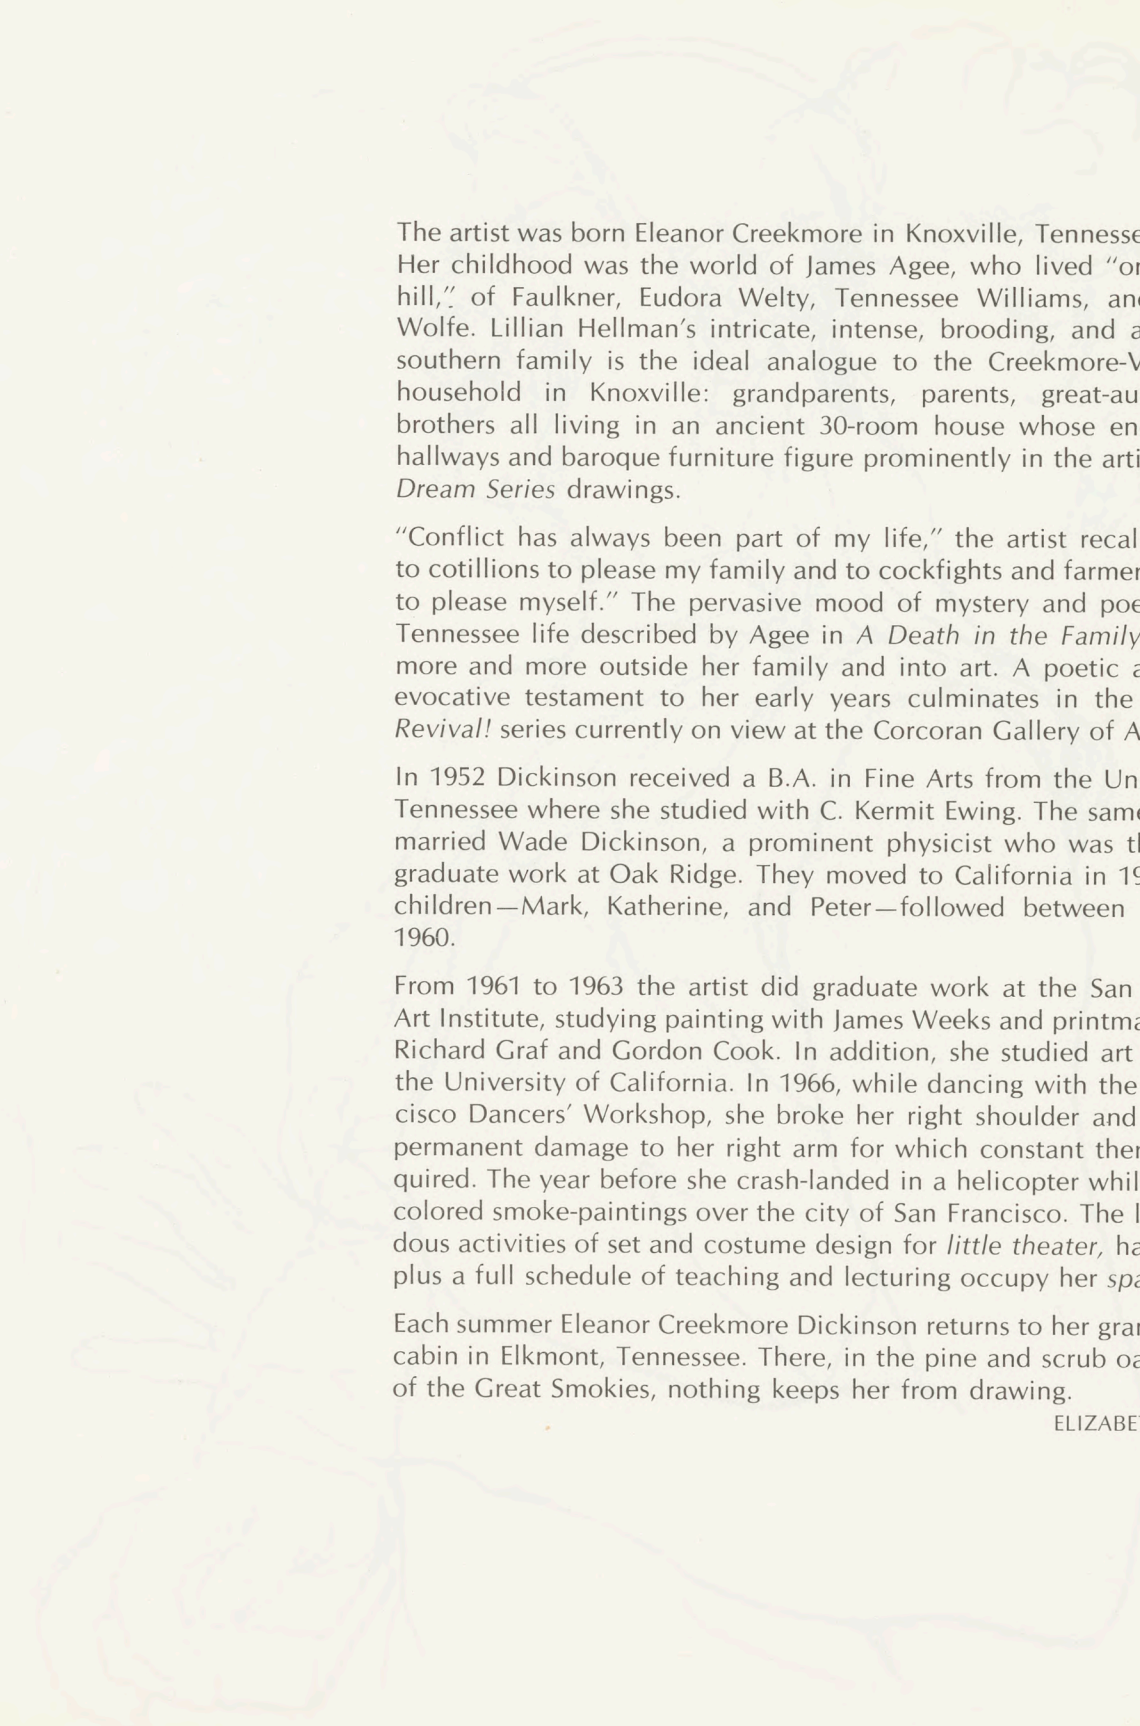

Dickinson's work is intuitive and direct: great stillness and concentration; no sketching motions common to the drawing experience, but an unbroken, fluid motion of her whole arm that describes first the "critical point of action—the crisis point—the relationship between two figures, the point of intensity."

The artist says that the single motion coming from the shoulder and informing wrist and hand—in much the same way that a great pianist moves shoulder, elbow, forearm, and wrist—frees her from the stereotyped forms of calligraphic drawing common to those who learned to draw with wrist and hand only. The result is a gradual, almost imperceptible, emergence of the image on paper; there seems to be little happening at first; it is much like watching the image emerge on sensitized paper in the darkroom. Magically, it is all there at once, and the drawing stops. (To achieve the sure, clean, unbroken line Dickinson used a Rapidograph pen until a shoulder injury in 1965 forced her to change to a felt pen with permanent ink for less drag on the paper.)

There are vast white spaces in her drawings, but also areas of meticulous attention to expressive detail superbly drawn. She does not sketch or plan drawings. She works always with models who must care equally about the experience. She never directs the models in poses but works and talks with them until a mood or emotion emerges that is real for both of them. The action then has a heightened quality; it becomes the drawing.

The artist was born Eleanor Creekmore in Knoxville, Tennessee in 1931. Her childhood was the world of James Agee, who lived "on the next hill," of Faulkner, Eudora Welty, Tennessee Williams, and Thomas Wolfe. Lillian Hellman's intricate, intense, brooding, and aristocratic southern family is the ideal analogue to the Creekmore-Van Gilder household in Knoxville: grandparents, parents, great-aunt, sister, brothers all living in an ancient 30-room house whose endless dark hallways and baroque furniture figure prominently in the artist's recent Dream Series drawings.

"Conflict has always been part of my life," the artist recalls. "I'd go to cotillions to please my family and to cockfights and farmers' markets to please myself." The pervasive mood of mystery and poetry in the Tennessee life described by Agee in A Death in the Family drew her more and more outside her family and into art. A poetic and highly evocative testament to her early years culminates in the masterful Revival! series currently on view at the Corcoran Gallery of Art.

In 1952 Dickinson received a B.A. in Fine Arts from the University of Tennessee where she studied with C. Kermit Ewing. The same year she married Wade Dickinson, a prominent physicist who was then doing graduate work at Oak Ridge. They moved to California in 1953. Three children—Mark, Katherine, and Peter—followed between 1955 and 1960.

From 1961 to 1963 the artist did graduate work at the San Francisco Art Institute, studying painting with James Weeks and printmaking with Richard Graf and Gordon Cook. In addition, she studied art history at the University of California. In 1966, while dancing with the San Francisco Dancers' Workshop, she broke her right shoulder and sustained permanent damage to her right arm for which constant therapy is required. The year before she crash-landed in a helicopter while creating colored smoke-paintings over the city of San Francisco. The less hazardous activities of set and costume design for little theater, happenings, plus a full schedule of teaching and lecturing occupy her spare time.

Each summer Eleanor Creekmore Dickinson returns to her grandparents' cabin in Elkmont, Tennessee. There, in the pine and scrub oak reaches of the Great Smokies, nothing keeps her from drawing.

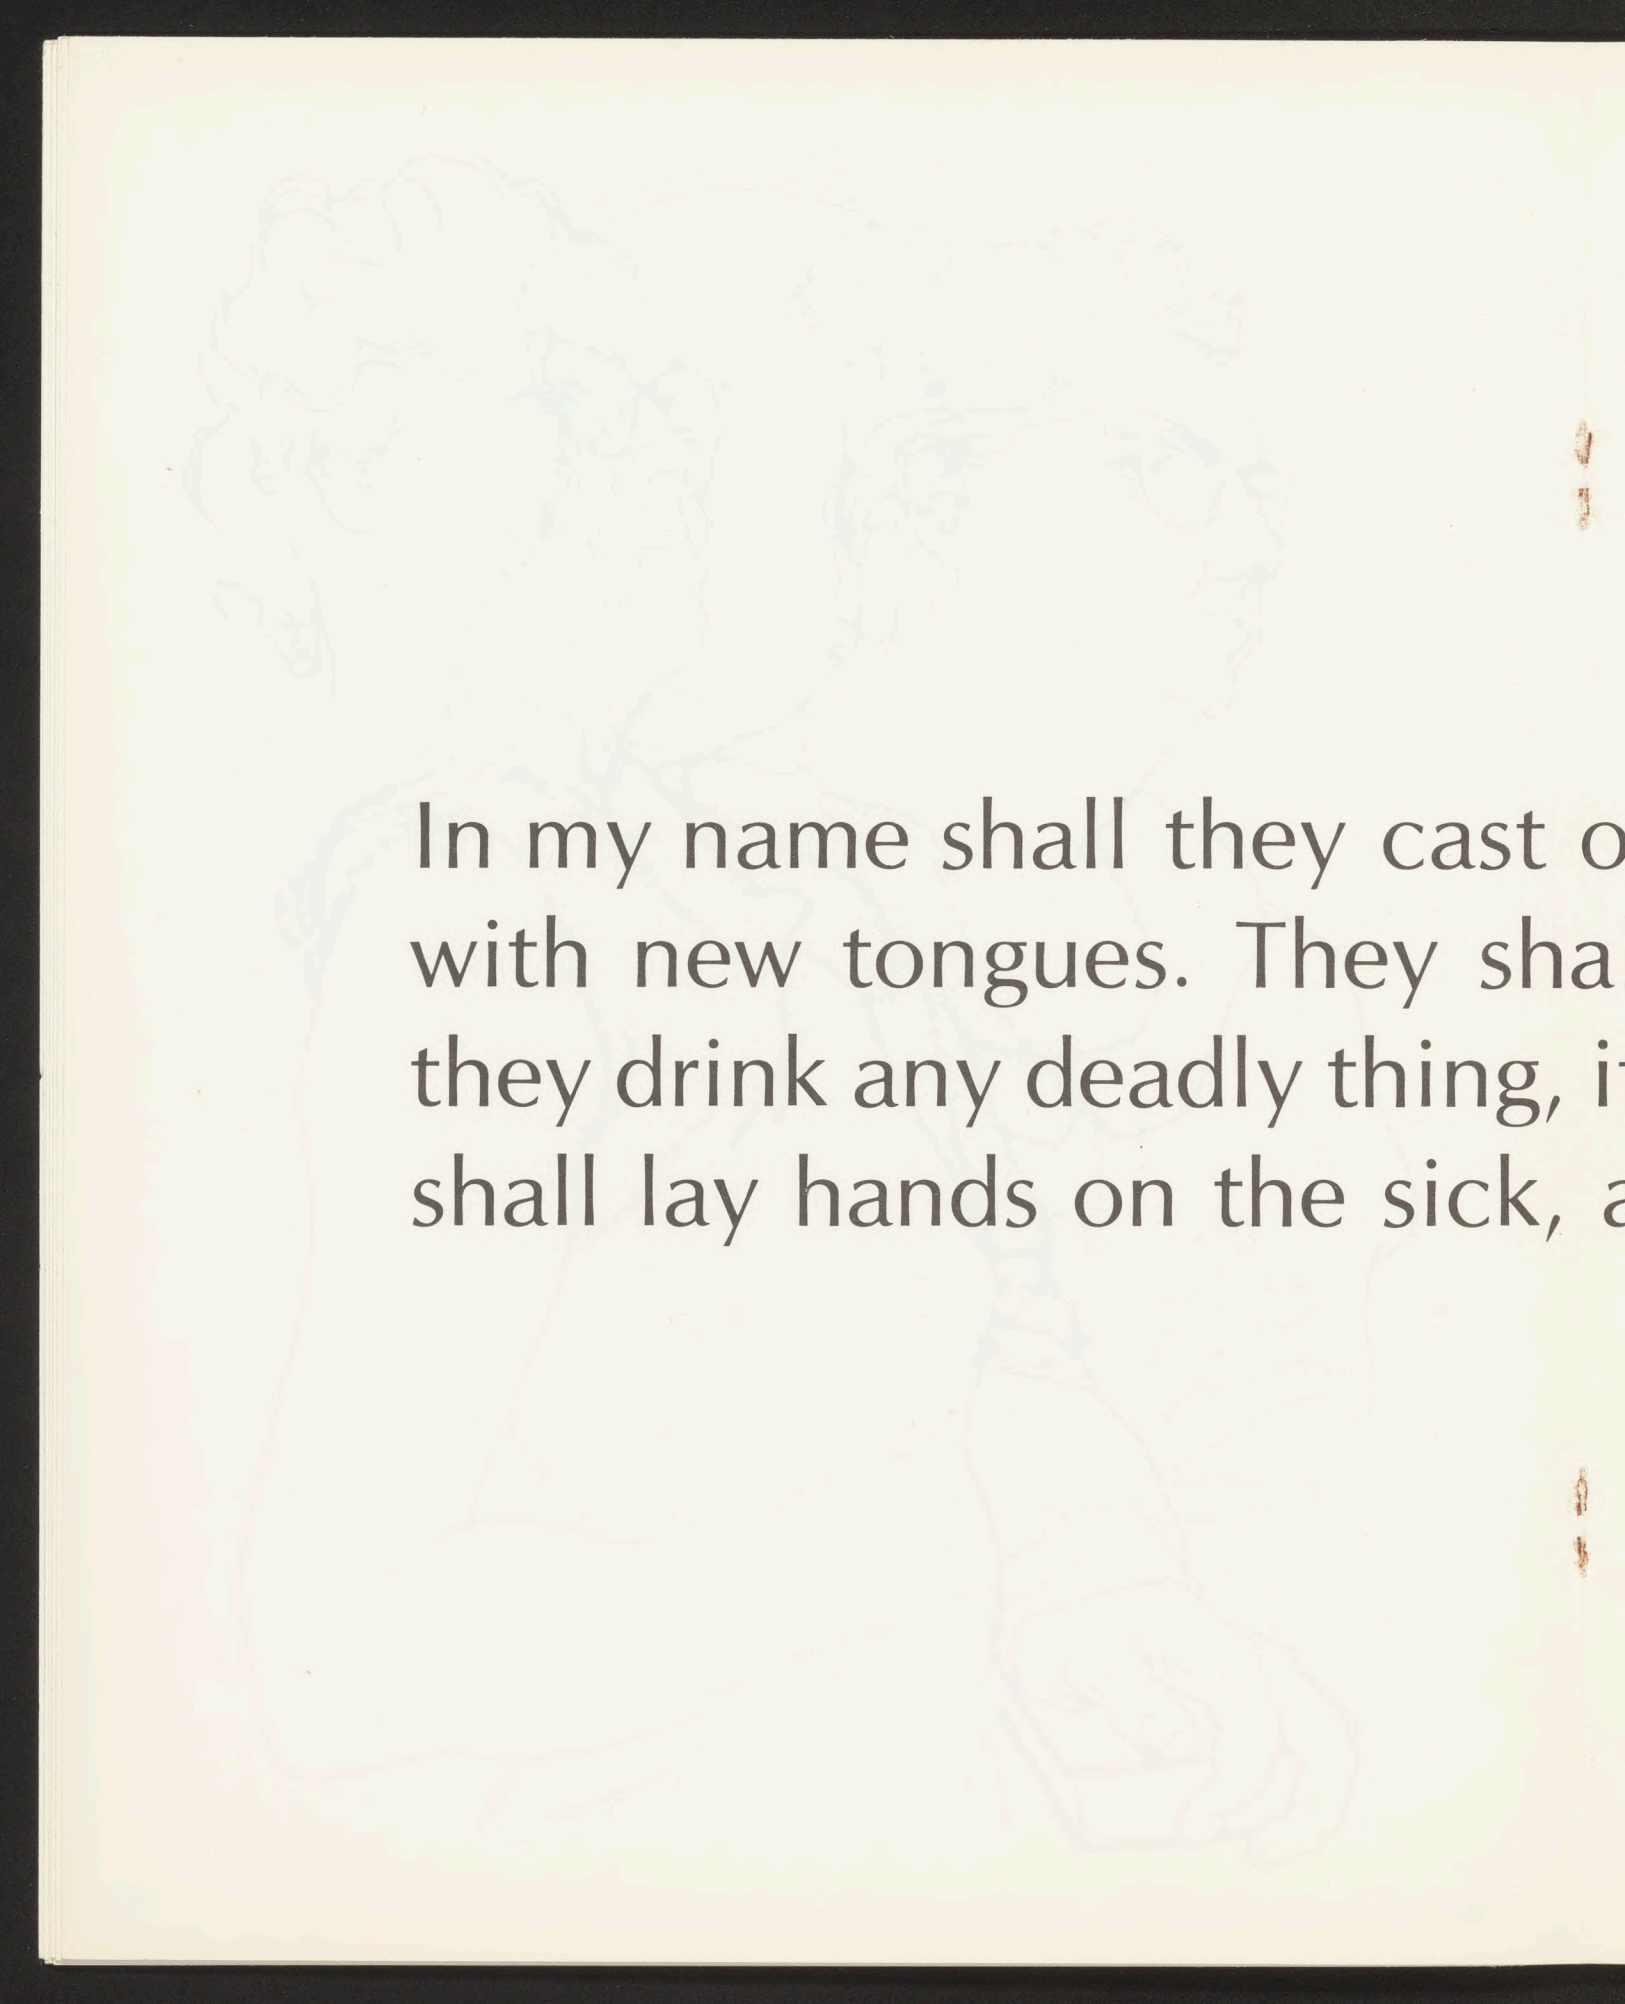

ELIZABETH COFFELT

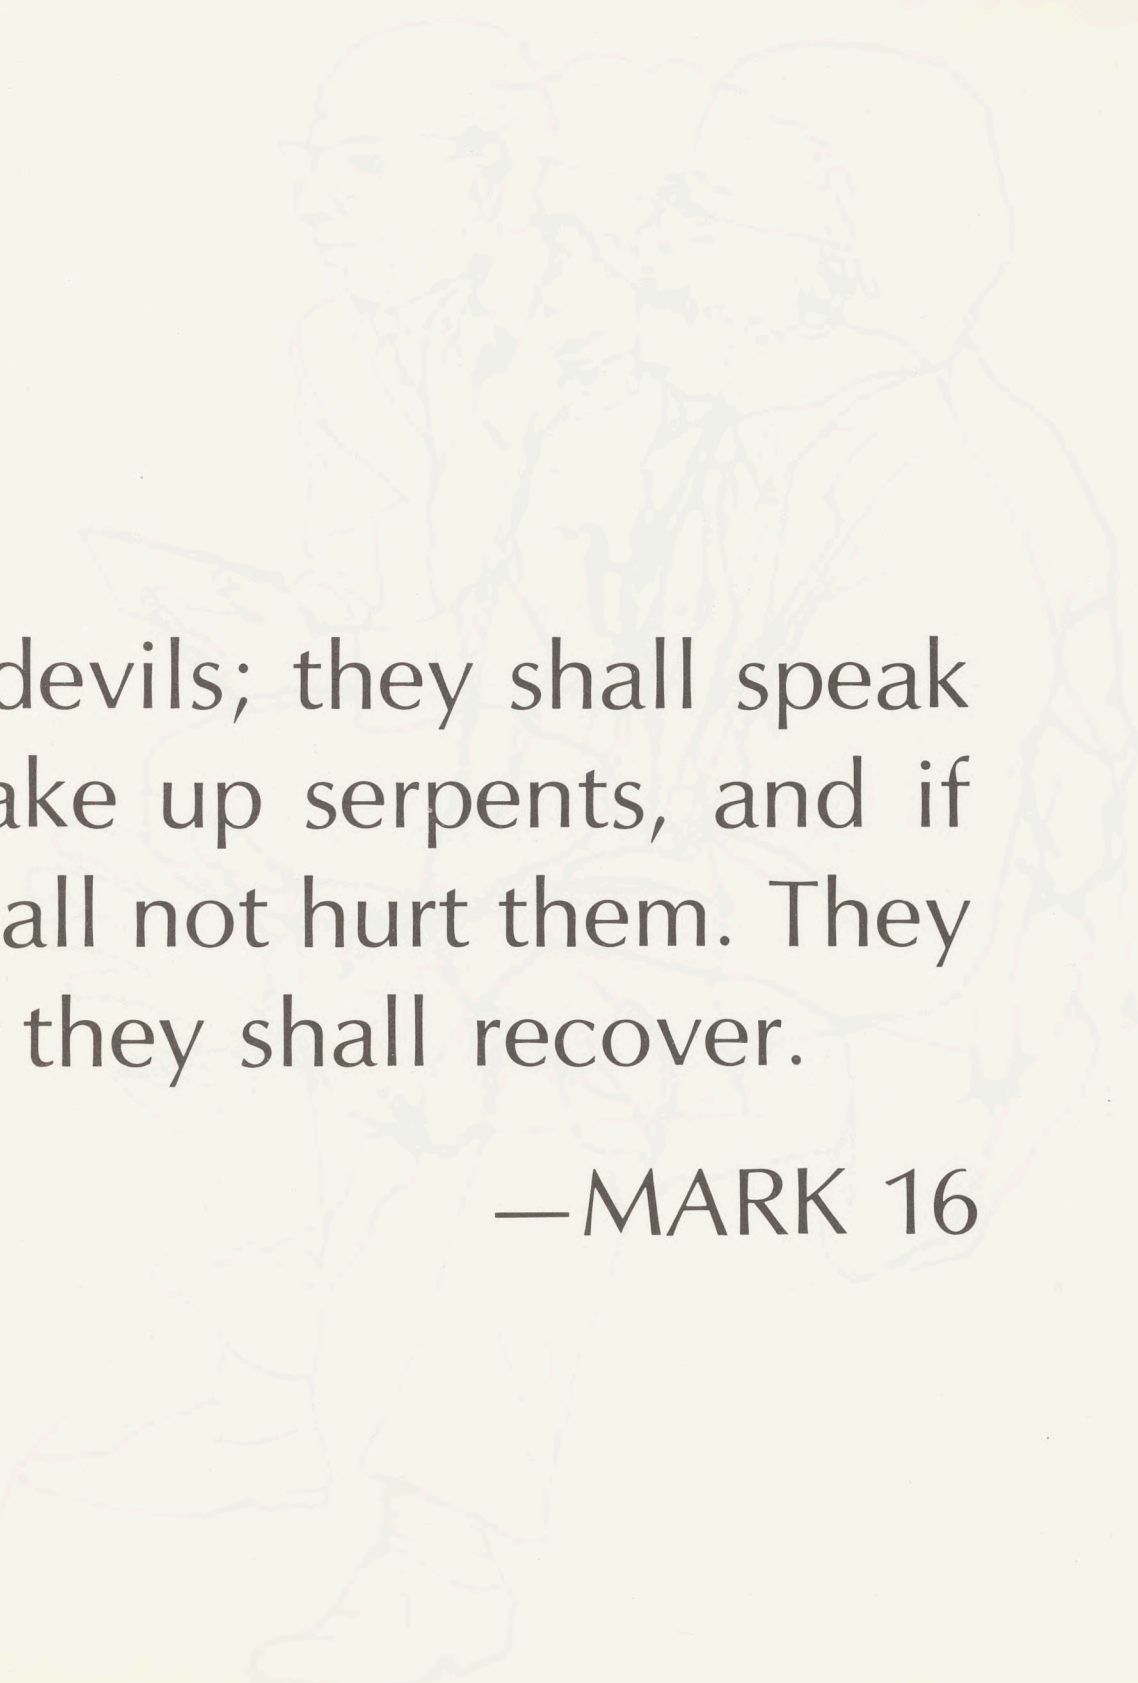

A faint, light-colored illustration of a person's face and hands is visible in the background. The face is at the top, looking slightly to the right, and the hands are at the bottom, with one hand resting on the other. The illustration is rendered in a sketchy, almost ethereal style with light blue and pinkish tones.

In my name shall they cast o with new tongues. They sha they drink any deadly thing, i shall lay hands on the sick, a t out devils; they shall speak shall take up serpents, and if g, it shall not hurt them. They k, and they shall recover.

GLOSSARY

CASTING-OUT-DEVILS	Praying over one believed to be possessed by devils; success is usually indicated by the afflicted person speaking-in-tongues or praying.
FAITH-HEALING	Praying for the sick with the expectation of immediate healing if the victim's faith in God is strong enough.
FOOT-WASHING	An ancient custom described in the Bible (John 13:1-5).
INVITATION	To come up to the front of the tent, confess sins, and repent.
LAYING-ON-OF-HANDS	An ancient religious custom described in the Bible in which the Saved place their hands on the head of the penitent so that the Holy Ghost can enter him through them.
PROPHESYING	While in a state resembling trance, the individual speaks in the first person as if God were speaking; wording is usually biblical.
REVIVAL	An evangelistic service or series of services (usually 10 days in the summer) for the purpose of effecting a religious awakening; traditionally in open tents.
SPEAKING-IN-TONGUES	An ancient phenomenon of persons in ecstasy feeling that they are "possessed by the Holy Ghost" and "allowing God to speak through them." Praying in unintelligible words that sound rather like a Romance or Oriental language. Considered a sign of God's favor and acceptance.
TESTIFYING	Usually by members of the congregation who bear witness to what God has done in their lives.
